

Karen Robinson

My name is Karen Robinson and my 25-year-old son Ben was killed in a single-car crash outside of Bendigo, in November 2009. He was travelling at 140km with a blood alcohol reading of 0.08 when he hit a kangaroo, lost control of his vehicle, and struck two trees.

I said to Ben once, that if he kept up his risky driver behaviour, I might have a police officer knocking at our front door. Unfortunately, that day did come, where our family received the news of Ben's tragic death, via our local police.

Our family want drivers, and all road users, to think about Ben's story in the hope that they will be safe and responsible drivers. Ben's story is a reminder that from the very first drink you consume compromises your ability to make good decisions.

Whilst it is difficult to tell Ben's story on behalf of my family, knowing that by sharing our family's road trauma experience, can and does, help others understand better the importance of road safety. It can help save lives and prevent serious injury caused by road trauma.

If being part of Road Trauma Support Services Victoria's organisation, telling my family's road trauma story, and being part of the education team - can help prevent road trauma from affecting other families, this for us, is a most-worthy of causes. This is why campaigns such as Shine a Light on Road Safety are vital; to help people think about what sort of driver/road user they are so that they, don't end up being their family's road trauma story...

SHINE A LIGHT ON ROAD SAFETY

Road Trauma Support Services Victoria's Shine a Light on Road Safety campaign is to raise awareness, to stop deaths and injuries on our roads and to raise funds to support those impacted by road trauma.

The campaign is part of National Road Safety Week and the Fifth United Nations Global Road Safety Week. #shinealightonroadsafety.

Sunday 5 May there is a community walk at Albert Park Lake to enable community participation in advocating for safer roads.

Friday 10 May motorists are asked to turn on headlights to remember those impacted by road trauma and show your commitment to road safety.
